Northern Los Angeles is made up of several fully incorporated towns but is widely known as the upscale and suburban part of the city. Communities like Burbank, Glendale and San Fernando host an assortment of malls, restaurants and neighborhoods perfect for families seeking a residential feel and professionals who want to live within driving distance of larger downtown areas.

In the Los Angeles metro area, residents enjoy around 300 sunny days every year and see warm, arid summers with long, cool winters. The northern part of Los Angeles provides residents with easy access to the downtown area, famous beaches like Malibu and several popular state and national parks.

Dan's Super Subs is a small sandwich shop that has been mentioned in the LA Times and Huffington Post as a "must-try." For over 30 years, its sandwich chefs have been creating masterpieces with their freshly steamed Italian rolls amid old-school décor. At Dan's, there's a sandwich for everyone.

Aside from its amazing burgers and crispy fries, another LA favorite is the buffalo cauliflower at HQ Gastropub. This is the perfect restaurant for those who want to experience a piece of the city life but don't want to trudge their way through downtown to get it.
